I would like to comment on the Microsoft/DOJ antitrust settlement. I do not feel that the proposed 'restrictions' on Microsoft will achieve anything or compensate for the damage that the company has wrought in the past.

"simply telling a defendant to go forth and sin no more does little or nothing to address the unfair advantage it has already gained."

Very wise words from the now retired judge Stanley Sporkin and the recent arrangement between the DOJ and Microsoft does nothing to address unfair advantages gained by Microsoft through it's previous (on-going) anti-competitive practises.

I would also like to thank the justice dept. for setting up this email address for feedback.

Regards,

Paul Berrecloth
